The old man who drinks brandy at the clean, well-lighted cafe is literally deaf, just as he is metaphorically deaf to the outmoded traditions of Christianity and Christian promises: He cannot hear them any more. He is alone, he is isolated, sitting in the shadow left by nature in the modern, artificial world.

A Clean, Well-Lighted Place (2008) - IMDb

The story "A Clean, Well-Lighted Place" by Earnest Hemingway, in my opinion, is a story about a mans loneliness. The story starts out in an empty café , very late at night. Even the setting symbolizes gloominess. There are two waiters one old, one young. The older waiter is lonely, and the young waiter has a wife.
